

STRONG TO VETO IT.

Bi-Partisan Police Bill Does Not Meet His Views.

Anti-Civil Service Clause Is His Main Objection.

The Legislature Will Pass It Over His Head.

That Mayor Strong will refuse to give his approval to the Bi-Partisan Police bill is now generally believed by politicians in town. His mind was practically made up last evening when he called upon Gov. Morton at the Hotel Renaissance and spent an hour in conference with him.

The situation was discussed very thoroughly, it is stated, and the Governor heard all the Mayor had to say upon the subject. The Governor received a call later on from Mr. Platt and Speaker Fish, while Senators Kilburn, Raines and Pound, and State Commissioner Proctor and Barnes also dropped in.

Another conference is expected to take place today at the Governor's apartments, at which Senators O'Connor and Lexow and Chairman Edward Lauterbach are to be present, but it is believed that no efforts can be made which will change the determination of Mayor Strong. The bill will go back to Albany without his approval.

While the Mayor has not yet signified publicly what his particular objections to the bill are, it is stated upon good authority that one of the chief grounds upon which he will refuse to accept it for the city was because it did away with the civil service examinations, and substituted for it an examination by members of the force.

This is the report, at least, which has been made to Gov. Morton by a delegation of several Senators with Mr. Lauterbach, visited the Mayor yesterday morning and sounded him as to his intentions with regard to the bill.

It was urged to approve the measure in all its features, but the Mayor said he would approve it unless this request was complied with. The clause in question provided for the appointment of an inspector and chief clerk by the present Civil Service Commission, and the supervision of such examination and appointment.

It is stated, however, that the Mayor insisted that the civil service clause should be stricken out, and that he would not approve it unless this request was complied with. The clause in question provided for the appointment of an inspector and chief clerk by the present Civil Service Commission, and the supervision of such examination and appointment.

According to Speaker Fish, who has spoken quite fully of the situation, the result of the Mayor's refusal to give his approval to the bill will be to put an end to all legislation for the present session.

Senator Stapleton, of Onondaga, says that the only way the Mayor could be induced to elect the four Commissioners who will reorganize the police force, as any future Mayor would be able to appoint a bi-partisan board, which would carry out his wishes just as he has always been done in the past.

The outlook this morning was that today would bring a decision upon the question of the uncertainties of the situation. The schemers of all factions are hard at work, and between the Mayor and his friends of Gov. Morton, to say nothing of the reformers under the leadership of Dr. Parkhurst, the Mayor is finding it no easy matter to steer a clear course.

Thomas C. Platt did not attend any of the numerous political conferences held in the various hotels last night. Many of his henchmen called at his office, 48 Broadway, however, and at 11 o'clock he was seen fairly busy listening to their stories.

Most of his callers were Senators and Assemblymen, who had hurried from Albany last night to know exactly what the Mayor's attitude was toward the Bi-Partisan bill. They wanted information concerning the Greater New York bill and also the demand for the resignation of Police Commissioners Murray and Linn.

According to the Mayor's friends, the Legislature will pass the Bi-Partisan bill over Mayor Strong's veto. The bill, it is believed, will pass the Legislature, and no matter how Gov. Morton feels about it, he, as the leader of his party, must not oppose the measure.

The bill appointing a commission to draw up a charter for the Greater New York will pass the Legislature, according to the same informant, but the question of realizing the Greater New York bill will be solved only at the next Legislature.

Mr. Platt will not be in the city after 3:30 o'clock to-day. At that hour he will start for Washington on another political errand. It is believed he will go there to confer with Senators Hill and Murphy as to the vacancy in the Civil Service Commission caused by the resignation of Theodore Roosevelt to accept of Col. Rice, who was at one time Gov. Hill's private secretary, is a stalwart Republican and a close friend of Mr. Rice is an aspirant for Roosevelt's place.

Rice is also a friend of Senator Hill, and Platt hopes by the latter's aid to land the office for Rice.

Mr. Platt called on Gov. Morton last night an hour or so after the Governor had got down from Albany.

The two conferred for about half an hour, but neither would say what the conversation was about.

Leont-Guy, ex-speaker Maibey were among the Mayor's visitors this forenoon. Mr. Sexton said that there was nothing to be done, and that the Mayor had simply come to the City Hall, he had simply come to the City Hall, he had simply come to the City Hall.

Mr. Sexton was asked concerning the several bills pending at Albany, in which New Yorkers take so much interest, and the Police Reorganization bill, he said:

"I am satisfied that it cannot pass in its present form. It is because Senator Bradley is opposed to it that he can't vote for it, and there is no hope of winning over Senators Coughlin, Reynolds and others."

"But we can break the Committee of Ten Reorganization bill, which recommends the Mayor's plan, and make them make it. I am sure of it. There are sixteen Republicans in the Senate who are unconditionally in favor of the Police Reorganization bill."

"Now I know that both Lexow and O'Connor have agreed that if it becomes apparent that the Police Reorganization bill cannot pass, they will vote for the Committee of Ten's measure."

"That is a position to know that Senator Owens will be back in Albany next Monday evening, and will vote for all Republican measures which come before him."

About the Bi-Partisan Police bill Mr. Sexton said that he was not in Mayor Strong's confidence concerning his Mayor's intention regarding it. Ex-speaker Maibey had a fifteen-minute conference with the Mayor afterwards he said:

THREAT LED TO A CAPTURE.

Detective Overheard the Talk of Mrs. Egan and Maggie Boyle.

John Egan, twenty-seven years old, of 310 East Thirty-second street, his wife, Mary, and Frank Moran, twenty-two, of 351 East Thirty-fifth street, were held for trial in the Yorkville Court today on charges of burglary. The complainant is Mrs. Lottie Mason, of 23 West Forty-eighth street.

Moran, with a man named David Hland, of 26 East Thirty-eighth street, was arrested and indicted some time ago for the same burglary. They were acquitted at the trial, as the evidence was insufficient.

Mrs. Mason's apartments were entered on Feb. 9, while she was paying a visit to Hland's mother. The entire place was ransacked and property consisting of a sashbag, a silver toilet set, gold and silver watches, a shawl, and neckties, two pairs and umbrellas was stolen.

Mason told the detectives that while she was at Mrs. Hland's house she missed her keys, and shortly before that Hland and Moran were at the house. On this evidence they were indicted.

Week ago Detectives Blinn and Fowler overheard a conversation between the three men in a rooming house, a young woman living at 523 First avenue, in which Mrs. Egan said: "If you don't return the money tickets you'll be sent to prison."

After the women parted, the detectives investigated and followed them. Fowler finally addressed Miss Boyle and exhibited his card.

This frightened her and believing that she was going to be arrested she took her money and fled.

She said that on Feb. 12 she lived at 23 Eighth street, Long Island City, but that Hland and Moran called and had with them a bundle of things. Both were strangers to her, and the things were introduced to her by the Egan.

She said that she took the things, and that she took them to a young married couple who were in reduced circumstances, and who were in need of money. She received, but kept the tickets, and it was those that were introduced to Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

THREAT LED TO A CAPTURE.

Detective Overheard the Talk of Mrs. Egan and Maggie Boyle.

John Egan, twenty-seven years old, of 310 East Thirty-second street, his wife, Mary, and Frank Moran, twenty-two, of 351 East Thirty-fifth street, were held for trial in the Yorkville Court today on charges of burglary. The complainant is Mrs. Lottie Mason, of 23 West Forty-eighth street.

Moran, with a man named David Hland, of 26 East Thirty-eighth street, was arrested and indicted some time ago for the same burglary. They were acquitted at the trial, as the evidence was insufficient.

Mrs. Mason's apartments were entered on Feb. 9, while she was paying a visit to Hland's mother. The entire place was ransacked and property consisting of a sashbag, a silver toilet set, gold and silver watches, a shawl, and neckties, two pairs and umbrellas was stolen.

Mason told the detectives that while she was at Mrs. Hland's house she missed her keys, and shortly before that Hland and Moran were at the house. On this evidence they were indicted.

Week ago Detectives Blinn and Fowler overheard a conversation between the three men in a rooming house, a young woman living at 523 First avenue, in which Mrs. Egan said: "If you don't return the money tickets you'll be sent to prison."

After the women parted, the detectives investigated and followed them. Fowler finally addressed Miss Boyle and exhibited his card.

This frightened her and believing that she was going to be arrested she took her money and fled.

She said that on Feb. 12 she lived at 23 Eighth street, Long Island City, but that Hland and Moran called and had with them a bundle of things. Both were strangers to her, and the things were introduced to her by the Egan.

She said that she took the things, and that she took them to a young married couple who were in reduced circumstances, and who were in need of money. She received, but kept the tickets, and it was those that were introduced to Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

THREAT LED TO A CAPTURE.

Detective Overheard the Talk of Mrs. Egan and Maggie Boyle.

John Egan, twenty-seven years old, of 310 East Thirty-second street, his wife, Mary, and Frank Moran, twenty-two, of 351 East Thirty-fifth street, were held for trial in the Yorkville Court today on charges of burglary. The complainant is Mrs. Lottie Mason, of 23 West Forty-eighth street.

Moran, with a man named David Hland, of 26 East Thirty-eighth street, was arrested and indicted some time ago for the same burglary. They were acquitted at the trial, as the evidence was insufficient.

Mrs. Mason's apartments were entered on Feb. 9, while she was paying a visit to Hland's mother. The entire place was ransacked and property consisting of a sashbag, a silver toilet set, gold and silver watches, a shawl, and neckties, two pairs and umbrellas was stolen.

Mason told the detectives that while she was at Mrs. Hland's house she missed her keys, and shortly before that Hland and Moran were at the house. On this evidence they were indicted.

Week ago Detectives Blinn and Fowler overheard a conversation between the three men in a rooming house, a young woman living at 523 First avenue, in which Mrs. Egan said: "If you don't return the money tickets you'll be sent to prison."

After the women parted, the detectives investigated and followed them. Fowler finally addressed Miss Boyle and exhibited his card.

This frightened her and believing that she was going to be arrested she took her money and fled.

She said that on Feb. 12 she lived at 23 Eighth street, Long Island City, but that Hland and Moran called and had with them a bundle of things. Both were strangers to her, and the things were introduced to her by the Egan.

She said that she took the things, and that she took them to a young married couple who were in reduced circumstances, and who were in need of money. She received, but kept the tickets, and it was those that were introduced to Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

THREAT LED TO A CAPTURE.

Detective Overheard the Talk of Mrs. Egan and Maggie Boyle.

John Egan, twenty-seven years old, of 310 East Thirty-second street, his wife, Mary, and Frank Moran, twenty-two, of 351 East Thirty-fifth street, were held for trial in the Yorkville Court today on charges of burglary. The complainant is Mrs. Lottie Mason, of 23 West Forty-eighth street.

Moran, with a man named David Hland, of 26 East Thirty-eighth street, was arrested and indicted some time ago for the same burglary. They were acquitted at the trial, as the evidence was insufficient.

Mrs. Mason's apartments were entered on Feb. 9, while she was paying a visit to Hland's mother. The entire place was ransacked and property consisting of a sashbag, a silver toilet set, gold and silver watches, a shawl, and neckties, two pairs and umbrellas was stolen.

Mason told the detectives that while she was at Mrs. Hland's house she missed her keys, and shortly before that Hland and Moran were at the house. On this evidence they were indicted.

Week ago Detectives Blinn and Fowler overheard a conversation between the three men in a rooming house, a young woman living at 523 First avenue, in which Mrs. Egan said: "If you don't return the money tickets you'll be sent to prison."

After the women parted, the detectives investigated and followed them. Fowler finally addressed Miss Boyle and exhibited his card.

This frightened her and believing that she was going to be arrested she took her money and fled.

She said that on Feb. 12 she lived at 23 Eighth street, Long Island City, but that Hland and Moran called and had with them a bundle of things. Both were strangers to her, and the things were introduced to her by the Egan.

She said that she took the things, and that she took them to a young married couple who were in reduced circumstances, and who were in need of money. She received, but kept the tickets, and it was those that were introduced to Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but only succeeded in finding the Egan and Moran at their shop at Third avenue and Forty-second street, which the detectives had been followed by Mrs. Egan.

After having accumulated all this evidence, the detectives went in search of the burglars again, but